

ILLUSTRATIVE DESIGN EXAMPLE — fictional business, fictional evidence, and no live AI-search result.

SHORTLIST · MINIMUM ASSESSMENT

A clearer picture of your website’s first impression.

A short, evidence-led look at what a potential customer may understand when they first visit your website.

TEMPLATE

Minimum Assessment v1.0

WHAT WE OBSERVED

Visitors can quickly see the service, area, and way to get in touch.

The fictional home page makes three services clear, names Auckland as the service area, and places a phone number and enquiry form above the fold.

Illustrative source: fictional home page, services page, and contact page.

Your snapshot

01

OBSERVED

Clear service description

Three core services are stated in everyday language, rather than in a long general introduction.

02

OBSERVED

Auckland context appears early

The opening page names the service area and repeats it on the contact page.

03

WORKING HYPOTHESIS

Trust proof could carry more weight

04

WHAT WE COULD NOT CONFIRM

Local suburb coverage

Adding dated customer quotes near the enquiry action may help a cautious visitor decide to contact the business.

The example site says “Auckland” but does not identify specific suburbs or travel boundaries.

What the website appears to say

This section distinguishes visible website information from an interpretation of what that information might mean to a prospective customer.

OBSERVED ON THE WEBSITE

Simple route to an enquiry

Phone, form, and “request a quote” actions appear in the introductory content.

Fictional evidence: home page call-to-action and contact page.

WORKING HYPOTHESIS

Likely buyer concern

A visitor may be deciding whether the business is dependable and covers their part of Auckland. The fictitious site’s current information partly answers that question.

Supported by the fictional service-area and contact-page content above.

One dated AI-search test

ILLUSTRATIVE ONLY

Example question

“What are the top three home-cleaning businesses in Auckland today?”

Example test time: 5 October 2026 · 11:20am Pacific/Auckland

This is a fictional layout example. In a real report, this area would show the exact question, the actual returned order/count, and available citations from one dated test.

1. Example Clean Co. — fictional citation
2. Harbour Home Help — fictional citation
3. Tidy Day Auckland — fictional citation

A real report would say: “This is the order returned in this specific dated AI-search test. Results may vary.”

A practical next step

WORKING HYPOTHESIS

Make the first 20 seconds do more work.

For this fictional example, the clearest improvement would be to name the main service, service area, and one concrete trust signal together near the enquiry action.

What this assessment cannot tell you: it does not predict enquiries, revenue, or a permanent position in any search result. It is one bounded review of public website information and, where configured, one dated test.
